Old Mystic Sheep Scene by Artist Loweth.

There is on exhibition in the window of George A. Davis' store, on Broadway, an old painting of a sheep scene in Old Mystic that is attracting considerable attention, because it is so true to nature. Artist Loweth was in that place of business when he accidentally saw the flock, and, being impressed with the idea that it would make an exceptionally good subject for a picture, he went to Old Mystic and sketched it and the surroundings. The work is so well executed that it is no wonder so many stop to look at it.

THE AUDITORIUM.

For the holiday week this popular playhouse is showing a bill which is bound to attract large audiences and send them away much pleased. The sketch entitled The College Hero is a very well chosen one for Kello, Leighton & Co. and always wins much applause. Brown & Brown, Indian singing cartoonists, do very clever work with the crayon and accompany their artistic handiwork with appropriate songs. This act is a very novel one and is well appreciated. The maharajahs, Coulter & Wilson, make things lively during their turn with catchy songs and accomplished piano playing which always catches the crowd. A comedy bicycle act is something that has not been seen here for a long time until this week when Joe Dale, one of the world's greatest trick bicycle riders, appeared, and is taking his audiences by storm. For the remainder of the week, including Christmas day, an extra feature will be given in the appearance of the Misses Morrell, who will sing both catchy and classical duets. The programme on Christmas day will be continuous from 1 to 5 and 7 to 10.30 p. m.

BREED THEATER.

"The Pine Ridge Feud." Unrivaled Feature Picture.

With the change of programme at the Breed theater today, comes a new and sensational picture entitled The Pine Ridge Feud, a picture of the true melodramatic type, and carrying a story that is as brilliant as it is thrilling.

The feud of many years' duration that has existed between two families of the extreme west is the cause of the plot, and there is not a dull moment in it, there being a thrill for every minute. The tremendous hate born of the savagery of primeval man is well contrasted with the tenderness of their love, that knows no law of God or man.

The bill for the latter half of the week contains a beautiful Christmas motion picture that will remain until after Christmas day.

Master Harry Noonan, the juvenile favorite, will sing for the balance of the week the exquisite Christmas song, The New Born King, appearing in his choir boy's costume. This number is one of his star numbers, and the beautiful finale is embellished by the careful use of church chimes. He will also sing Have a Drink to Yankee Land, a splendid illustrated song.

On Christmas day, the performances will run from 1.30 to 5 p. m., and from 7 to 10.30 p. m.

Springfield's River Front.

The Springfield Union complains of the slowness of the movement to improve the river front of that city. The plan is to take out the railroad tracks south of the city along the Connecticut, and have green grass and old cannon on the bank for a mile or so, where there are now hen coops made out of old tin roofs, and other evidences of European and Asiatic thrift. Two and a half years ago everything seemed settled. President Mellen seemed to be tickled at the prospect of doing something to show his good will toward the city, and when you listened to him it looked as if he would go ahead and do something before the old home folks really got their minds made up on just what they wanted. But nothing has been done and there is no more prospect of actual accomplishment than there has been for two and a half years. Mellen is still anxious to do something, as friendly as ever, and as fertile in suggestions as he is in deeds. Mellen is a slick article, and he has a chance to show what he is made of in Springfield. The city seems to be set on a very ambitious scheme for betterment, too ambitious for the city and the railroad, and Mellen probably hopes that time will bring enough people to a realization of the situation to enable him to get out with less expenditure than has heretofore seemed possible. Of course Springfield is looking out for itself only, but Mellen has to look out for his side of the matter, and it's no easy job he has to keep expenses down so that he can earn his eight per cent. dividends. The New Haven railroad is in no position to spend a dollar that will not directly and speedily earn its way, and until there is an improvement in its earnings Springfield may expect to be held off by the company.—Northampton Gazette.

Home Rule.

Mr. Asquith's promise to Ireland, although it was forced by a political situation, nevertheless expresses the logic of the situation and the probability of the future. While the British empire retains its strength, Ireland will never be entirely independent. She will not have a separate army, nor will she make her own tariff regulations or her own foreign treaties. Short of such actual independence, however, there is no excuse for England permanently to refuse her self-government. For her to be entirely responsible for her internal regulations would be the best discipline she could undergo. There might be trouble for a while. The power of taxation might be used for revenge. An Irish police might not be used wholly for purposes of justice. Those are the two results most feared by English home rulers—the two considerations which have led them to go slowly. Another motive has been ecclesiastical opposition, a step which might enable the Catholic church to exercise increased influence in university education—a reason, of course, which is wholly indefensible. Home rule is sure to increase until Ireland has no more just ground for complaint than exists in the relation of an American state toward our central government.—Collins' Weekly.

James A. Herne.

The accident which destroyed "Herne Oaks" on Long Island, did more than bring a misfortune to one family. It put out of existence two of the most significant plays yet written on this continent. "Margaret Fleming" was the first sincere, intelligent, and intimate study of life, in the modern realistic method, portrayed in the drama of the United States. Mrs. Herne is so saturated with this play that she may be able almost exactly to reproduce it. "The Rev. Griffith Davenport" is gone forever, and gone without being widely seen. The circumstances of its production were not altogether fortunate, and although a considerable number of observers recognized it as perhaps the most distinguished and original of all American plays, it was to the general public practically unknown. Mrs. Herne's talent, taste, and spirit were never better represented. Had the fire not blotted it from the world, the play would have been the duty of the New theater to reproduce. Today, we have in Moody, MacIntyre, Sheldon, Walter, Mitchell, Miss Crothers, and a number of others a rapidly increasing group of dramatists worthy of their art. Mr. Herne was a pioneer. Standing alone, he pointed the way; a solitary and noble figure. The disaster which has fallen upon his family is a calamity for us all. When the serious history of the American stage comes to be properly written, one of the places of highest honor will be devoted to Mr. Herne. It would be a pity also if there were not written before it is too late a biography of the man who was one of our finest actors as well as our most progressive playwright. Already the work is so well executed that it is no wonder so many stop to look at it.

The Voice is the Voice of Theodora.

There was more than a touch of Roosevelt in the remarks of President Taft to eighty-five newly appointed supervisors of the census who called upon him. Without mincing matters and without any notable caution in his selection of words, the president in his brief remarks to the group would be "fired" without delay if caught in even the smallest act of politics. They were given distinctly to understand that their positions are not of a political nature and that a misapprehension on their part will result in the instantaneous vanishing of their jobs. Such talk from the president is distinctly pleasing, especially when it is borne in mind that some of the most important positions in the census taking service have been given to known politicians. The jobs may be rewards for political service, but they are not to be used for political purposes. Mr. Taft would have done better to avoid all political appointments, but, failing that, he has done the next best thing by eliminating politics after appointment.

"Many of you—most of you—have been recommended by congressmen," said the president to his visitors, "and it may be that some of those congressmen will come to you and expect because they did recommend you that you owe them something in the way of selecting the men as enumerators who will help them in their congressional elections."

You have got to select the men who you think will do the work, and if you catch them doing political work I wish you to remove them, just as I will remove you if I catch you doing political work. It is business. One might shut his eyes and imagine that it was Colonel Roosevelt talking.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.
